IN MEMORIAM

Gregory Pitts spoke to us over a period of several days during the fall of 1979 about our plans to establish a Third World Law Journal. He had a strong sense of its potential for good, and promised that, as soon as he could, he would join us, work with us, and, perhaps, write an article for the first issue.

Gregory died a few weeks later on December 22, before he could make good on his promise. He was 24 years old, and in his second year at Boston College Law School.

Those of us who came to know him saw him fight cancer daily and courageously before our very eyes. Fight it to the end.

This, our first issue of the Boston College Third World Law Journal, is dedicated to his memory. We hope he would have been proud of what we did.
