

Boston College Law Review

---

Volume 44

Issue 2 Symposium: Intellectual Property, E-Commerce And The Internet

Article 1

---

3-1-2003

A Note Of Thanks

Alfred C. Yen

Follow this and additional works at: <http://lawdigitalcommons.bc.edu/bclr>

---

Recommended Citation

Alfred C. Yen, A Note Of Thanks, 44 B.C.L. Rev. 289 (2003), <http://lawdigitalcommons.bc.edu/bclr/vol44/iss2/1>

This Miscellaneous is brought to you for free and open access by the Law Journals at Digital Commons @ Boston College Law School. It has been accepted for inclusion in Boston College Law Review by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Boston College Law School. For more information, please contact nick.szydowski@bc.edu.

A NOTE OF THANKS

ALFRED C. YEN*

On October 18–19, 2002, Boston College Law School hosted a most informative and enjoyable two day conference entitled “Intellectual Property, E-Commerce, and the Internet.” At the conference, nine distinguished new scholars assembled to share their ideas about the relationship between the Internet and law, and the Boston College Law Review kindly agreed to publish their papers in this symposium issue. I think it safe to say that the conference was a great success. As the reader will see, the Articles published here significantly advance our understanding of the doctrines and theories that drive the application of law to the Internet.

Another major factor in the conference’s success was the participation of nine prominent law professors and practicing lawyers. Each of these individuals graciously agreed to read one of the principal papers and offer comments on it. Unfortunately, commentators are not listed as publishers of papers, so it is appropriate to recognize them here for their valuable contributions to the conference and the symposium:

Dan Burk, University of Minnesota School of Law
Graeme Dinwoodie, Chicago-Kent School of Law
Andrew Feinberg, Lycos, Inc.
Wendy Gordon, Boston University School of Law
Thomas Hemnes, Foley Hoag, LLP
Andrew McLaughlin, ICANN & the Berkman Center
David Perla, Monster.com
Mitch Singer, Sony Pictures
Alfred Yen, Boston College Law School

It is also important to recognize the many individuals whose personal efforts supported the conference. Professors Ann Bartow, Shubha Ghosh, and Maureen O’Rourke moderated many of the sessions. Rosalind Kaplan handled most of the conference’s logistics and travel arrangements. Nate Kenyon produced the conference flyers and brochures. The Boston College Intellectual Property and Technology Law Forum offered logistical help and support. Great contributions have been made by the Boston College Law Review, especially editor-in-chief Jessica Taylor O'Mary and symposium editor Joseph Donohue. Professor Joe Liu, my conference co-organizer, deserves kudos for his valuable intellectual contributions. Besides being a symposium author and conference co-organizer, he also designed the conference web page. The conference would have been far less successful without him.

---

* Professor of Law, Boston College Law School and conference co-organizer.

Finally, special thanks must go to three institutions that made this conference possible. Hale and Dorr LLP and Goodwin Procter LLP generously acted as sponsors. Boston College Law School, and Dean John Garvey, provided financial support through the Law School Fund.

It is my sincere hope that those who read this symposium issue of the Boston College Law Review will find these Articles exciting and stimulating. The Internet is a powerful social phenomenon that challenges legal institutions and even our very conception of law. The Boston College Law School Symposium on Intellectual Property, E-Commerce, and the Internet and the resulting Articles published in this issue play an important role in helping society meet that challenge.